Juun 10, 2017 @ 10:16PM In order to find out some of the source code of the pieces in question, you have to run kdump, and set up your configuration file properly to make this possible. Cinean regularly works with GitHub to find and eliminate issues by using this tool. The source code is open.Q: Change style for :hover on nav link So here's a quick question. When I hover over a nav link, I'd like it to turn pink. I know I can do: `a:hover { color: #DADADA; }` However, it's not changing the color of the nav link (that's fine) but it's changing the color of my body!

Any idea how I can target a specific element? Thanks A: You can add a class to the li element, and use the `a:hover` selector on the class instead of the body tag, like this: `... .hover { color: red; } li a:hover { background: url('../img/nav-text.png') no-repeat` left center; } A: Yes, using a class will allow you to select that element without affecting the rest of the page. a:hover{ color: #dada; } .myClass:hover{ color:

#DADADA; } A: If you have a parent container around a ul or div to hold the nav links, then the :hover selector in the CSS will apply to both the anchor and the container. However, that container (whose background, border, and font color will change) should be "thin" (defined as not taking up 100% width), so it doesn't push the normal body text into the margins.
