"Can world leaders solve their own problems?" I asked myself, when I saw the tense and joyful greeting of PM Shinzo Abe and President Putin. Abe expressed his satisfaction with the fact that the summit was "a sign of a greater unity and a stronger global economy." But what comes next? Osaka achieved a lot, but the summit did not give more economic stability. I am not expecting another war-torn summit as in 2009 in London. But this time also the outcomes have to be evaluated. PrivacyCell-free urine as a testing medium for the detection of prostate specific antigens. To evaluate cell-free urine as a fluid for the detection of prostate specific antigens (PSA), PSA immunoreactivity was assayed in cell-free urine and serum by a sensitive and specific enzyme immunoassay. Each of the 105 patients undergoing radical prostatectomy as treatment of clinically localized prostate cancer, with and without seminal vesicle invasion, had a serum and a cell-free urine sample taken before surgery. The immunoreactivities for PSA in the samples were compared with PSA values for the patients' serum samples and the PSA values for standard materials ($1 \times 10(7)$ LNCaP cells, 2 x 10(7) LNCaP cells, PAP-1, J-R1, PAP-3 and UV), which were assayed with the same method. The immunoreactivities for PSA in both cell-free urine and serum samples correlated with serum PSA, as indicated by regression analysis (r = 0.71). The mean PSA value for the patients' cell-free urine was slightly higher than that for the patients' serum. The highest correlation between PSA values for cell-free urine and serum was observed with serum PSA value (r = 0.74), when the patients were grouped according to seminal vesicle invasion (i.e. no invasion vs. invasion). There was no difference in the immunoreactivity for PSA for cell-free urine between patients with no and with seminal vesicle invasion (P = 0.27). In conclusion, cell-free urine may be used as a substitute for serum as a testing medium for the detection of serum PSA.by For the past few weeks I've been working with a team of talented people to build Drupal 7 on Debian and Ubuntu.
