CINCINNATI, OH (SEPT. 27, 2014) – Paraguay, a country in South America, is best known for its soccer and for the Giant King Rat, a rat bred in the United States and shipped to Paraguay for exhibition. What most people don't know, though, is that the Giant King Rat is really more of a house cat. It isn't capable of surviving in the wild, where it would have to contend with predators, weather, and exposure to parasites and disease. The Paraguayan Giant Rat breeder, Dr. Horacio Rodríguez, of Hammond, Indiana, was determined to see if his Giant Rat breed could survive in its natural habitat in Paraguay. He succeeded and has presented the Giant King Rat to the public at the Museo Antonio Guijarro. As Dr. Rodríguez explained, his research turned up several factors that were not considered in the initial breeding plan. Looking at the Giant King Rat Of course, knowing that the Giant King Rat is a house cat does not tell us what it looks like. Well, we can tell you that, as of right now, the Giant King Rat breed looks like a tuxedo cat. It has a fine coat of short, smooth hair that is a deep amber-brown. It has a small head and big eyes. The Giant King Rat is somewhat unique in the cat world because it has a long body and legs. The Giant King Rat's tail is not short and bushy like a standard cat. Rather, the tail is actually very long, almost reaching the toes. Giant King Rat Traits The Giant King
