What's New in the Photoshop CS4?

, which comes from an actual motif that goes back to ancient times: the evil eye. This is the "magic eye" of the common European species. Unfortunately, when applied to the whole face, this leads to negative implications: grotesque alterations, false paradigms, specific paradigms of beauty – and thus, the resulting photos are only caricatures or downright embarrassing. Unfortunately, after making the photograph, too often the subject "turns a blind eye" towards the finished product. Which leads us to an intervention, which was simply intended to be an assignment, but which has become a real project. What if we turn the eyes to each other, to our own work, and, even more so, to the real meaning of our work? Then, what if we imagine that we are part of a group? That we are a collective character that has captured our time as "current" art? That it is time for us to realize that we are together, united, and, indeed, a community? What could this mean for a portrait gallery? It would mean that the artist has to be herself and that the artist has to submit to her work. It would mean that there would be no "good" and "bad" art, but that we would recognize, say, "good design", "good drawing", "good photo", "good" or "bad" according to the ideas, skills, and work of every single person involved in the project. And finally, it would mean that we would have to examine, understand, value and appreciate our own labor. It is obvious that this is a big philosophical change. Who would not like to be taken as a historical character, to be evaluated on the basis of the now outdated criteria of morality and sense, to be considered to the extent that it exists in the collective memory? For this reason, one should say that the photo series is not only an artistic experiment, but also an example of unconscious labor. The real artists (and "artists" are all of us), the "good" and "bad", instead of being judged, should be understood – and that is an extremely important point, because it would mean, in a way, that everyone who takes part in a collective project should realize that he or she is only one of the group, but that, in fact, all of the participants
