Tutorial by: Didsbury Studios Photoshop Elements comes with a lot of amazing tools built into the program and can do some amazing things you may not have come across before in Photoshop. You will learn some cool stuff and have some fun along the way. Photoshop Elements is open source which means that anyone can access and modify the program in the way they like it. Start by adding a new document and clicking File | New. We want to create a 300dpi desktop image in 4:3 format. Type in the name you'd like to use for your new image. Now choose the Start button from the File menu and then click on the type of file you would like to create an image from. In this case, we will be creating an image from a PDF file. Once you've selected a PDF file, a new window will appear that includes many advanced settings. Click on the Options button on the bottom right of the window for more customization options. Now we'll be adding a new background that will be the main subject of our new image. Go to the Fill tab and select a dark background. This will be a good place to use some Gradients. Click on the Gradient tool, click on the Arrow in the upper-right corner to make it visible, and make sure the settings are on a 100% scale. Click on the arrow in the upper-right and move the slide bar to 100% as seen in the next image below. Now click on the Background Selection button and grab the selection tool, also from the top menu bar, which will show the Tool Properties for the Background Selection. Now click on the white part of the selection and drag it to the right edge of the screen, we now have a selection that covers the dark gray part of the image above. Click on the Artistic Edge button in the lower-left, go to the Transparency tab, and select 50% for the blend mode. Now click on the Artistic Edge button again and go to the Blending Options and select Overlay. Now we're going to be applying the gradient. Click on the area you want the gradient to start in the top of the image and then drag it all the way to the bottom.
