Operations Research Applications And Algorithms Wayne L. Winston 2003 Paperback 09665974811 student Solutions Manual for. An EELS study of the relationship between molecular structure and the fabrication of perovskite thin film using a solution-based method. The structure of solution-processed $\text{Pb}(\text{Zn}_{1/3}\text{Nb}_{2/3})\text{O}_3\text{-PbTiO}_3$ thin film containing Mn^{2+} was studied using an electron energy-loss spectroscopy method. In order to understand the mechanism of the formation of these thin films, the perovskite structure was characterized via EELS, and the difference between these two Mn-containing thin films was investigated. The energy loss of Zn was higher in the thin films with a proportion of Mn^{2+} than in the thin films without Mn^{2+} , and Mn^{2+} changed the crystal structure and the perovskite tilt of the thin film without Mn^{2+} . The energy losses of Pb were observed at the bottom and top surface of the thin film, demonstrating the movement of Pb ions. The electric field was detected at the surface and underneath the top surface, which demonstrated the movable behavior of Mn^{2+} in the thin films. The perovskite tilt obtained from the EELS analysis was verified using the as-grown thin film and the Mn-free thin film annealed at 300 degrees C for 1 h. Smoking, lung cancer and histological type: a systematic review. Smoking is a well-established risk factor for lung cancer, though only a minority of smokers die of the disease. We systematically reviewed evidence for associations between smoking and histological type of lung cancer. Studies were selected if they reported data on (1) histological type and tobacco consumption; (2) histological type and total cigarette smoking; and (3) histological type and intensity of smoking. Of the 14 eligible articles, only two reported a significant association between histological type and smoking. A meta-analysis of 14 studies with reported information on smoking and histological type was carried out in men. There was no association between the incidence of adenocarcinoma and smoking or pack-years. Similarly, there was no significant association between the incidence of squamous cell carcinoma and smoking or pack-years. There was no association between smoking and lung cancer histology in women. In conclusion, this systematic review does not support a role of smoking in the incidence of different histological types of lung cancer. Induction
