Research shows that domestic violence (DV) is one of the most common and serious problems facing women and that family members and intimate partners are the primary perpetrators of DV. During pregnancy, the National Family Violence Prevention Fund has funded a nurse-initiated home visitation (NIHV) program to assist pregnant women and their children, ages 5-18 years, at risk for DV. Women who received NIHV services had better social support, felt safer in their homes, and had more control in their lives. Social support and improved life circumstances serve to increase resilience and decrease risk for DV. Determining that NIHV helps women and children is a first step to establishing the value of programs designed to enhance women's health and safety. By adding supporting social science research, it is possible to present a coherent argument for NIHV as part of a plan to stop DV, reduce the presence of DV in families and communities, and work toward women's health and safety.While Miley Cyrus has found plenty of ways to be scandalous in the past, it seems the most recent side of her that has been getting attention is in regards to her weight. The singer recently told a fan on Instagram that she is "...PRETTY FAT right now...so stick with me," which
