Let A be an arbitrary non-zero vector in $\mathbb{R}^2$. Is there a vector field $V:U\to\mathbb{R}^2$ such that $\nabla f(x)=A+V(x)$ for all $x\in U$? I think not, because ∇f could not be defined for $x\in U\setminus V^{-1}(A)$, which is a set with strictly positive measure. However, I am not so sure about this argument. A: In order for this to hold, f must have a single-valued gradient with respect to any vector field V (as it is true if and only if V is the gradient field of f, the latter being not the case). I've been chasing this tiny puppy for nearly a week, after it was posted on this site. I wanted to catch it, but it was moving too fast. And it kept changing direction. Its location is pretty safe now, and I can confirm it's three inches long. I will try to get a better picture of it, at a time when it's at rest.
