Each layer represents a section of your image that you can modify or cut out of the composition. You can also combine different layer types in your image, using layer masks to turn the shadows from one layer transparent and to use it with another layer. When you place layers on top of each other, you create a new layer that represents the layers underneath. FIGURE 3-1: To create a new layer, choose Layer⇒New Layer, or press Shift+Ctrl+N. Photoshop has many other amazing capabilities, but if you just don't want to worry about them now, jump to Chapter 10 for a look at those features. Now that the NHL lockout is over, the season is set to begin on Saturday, and there are many things to talk about. The biggest topic is the two separate lockouts that have existed for much of the past decade. The first lockout affected 12 teams that went to the 2004-05 season. The players won that stoppage, but the owners took it upon themselves to lock out the players again in the middle of the 2005-06 season. The owners eventually relented, but the two leagues entered a most recent lockout in 2011-12 that lasted until April 2012. As far as we know, it's been a while since the two sides have come to an agreement. Here's a look at who was in the two lockouts, what happened, and what might have been: NHL Lockout, 2004-05 What happened: The 2004-05 lockout took approximately half of the NHL's regular-season schedule off the table, but the season didn't start. It didn't stop, either. What might have been: According to bookmakers' websites, the next lockout would have been in the 2005-06 season. The NHL actually lost money during the 2004-05 lockout because teams didn't have to honor the contracts of their players. NHL Lockout, 2005-06 What happened: After the lockout in the middle of the 2005-06 season, the owners and players were unable to negotiate a new collective-bargaining agreement, so the lockout continued. It lasted 74 days. The NHL postponed the rest of the season on Nov. 11, 2005, and the subsequent lockout went through Jan. 16, 2006. What might have been: Earlier in the decade, the owners locked out the players in September 2004, but an agreement was reached before the season even started and owners and players returned to work. In 2007, the league set up a committee to examine competitive balance among the teams, but the lockout eventually continued through the 2009-10 season. NHL Lockout, 2011-12 What happened: The NHL had a collective-bargaining agreement through the 2011-12 season. The latest lockout, which started on Sept. 15, 2011, started when the league wanted to have the players take a 50-50 revenue split. The players didn't budge. It lasted eight months. The NHL resumed play on Jan. 19, 2012. What might have been: The owners
