Swedish composer Hervé Dias chose the the freedom of Vancouver for its sheer splendid nature and its vast environmental consequences while Bratislava, in the Slovakian capital, brought to mind the luxury of Vienna's best hotels. While Martin Preisz and his band played popular music on the various stages on Tuesday afternoon, the audience and the well-heeled sponsors enjoyed the milieu and atmosphere of artistic activities. It was a distinction of multiple performers, each representing his or her country in the contest, since the number of tickets sold was not enough for everybody. Approximately 6,500 tickets were handed out at each festival-venue, giving a place to about 3,000 participants. A first to the Canadian stage was Markus Schlein, the leader and owner of the Belvedere label. He received the Golden Award in the category of rock for more than 20 years for his recordings and concerts. "My involvement in recording music has been a great experience," he said afterwards, adding that he has had a keen interest in Canada for a long time. For example, he says he has read The Lonely Planet guide and liked it. "I come on my own to Vancouver for the first time and I have to say that this is a city with much to offer. It is such a good combination of traditional and modern, two things that I adore." Schlein continued, mentioning the pioneering spirit of Colin Jacobs and the Canadian Club. "If I were a young person starting my career, I would look for him and the Canadian Club to get advice and help." Their contemporary - US rapper A$AP Rocky came next with his album LongLiveLongLive. The first track "Fuckin Fast" was a hit here in the summer. Rocky told the audience that the recording of his first album took place in Brooklyn, New York. "It was a small studio with a small budget. I had to learn how to make money." LongLiveLongLive has been certified gold in Canada since it was released last week. "I am grateful for the success this album has got here." But Rocky also had to leave the stage. Shortly before his next, hit song "Long Live", he was arrested in New York at the request of the Swedish Embassy. He had been accused of assault and was held for seven hours. After his legal counsel advised him against going to Spoiler for 5 years ago: I just want to say something here: I really like the concept of the game. I knew that one day you'd make this. I always thought it'd be awesome if a game used the story of Assassin's Creed as its inspiration. But, I'm sad to say I don't think that the game will have much of an appeal to me. I'm a huge fan of the concept, but I'm afraid that I just don't enjoy the Assassin's Creed style of game.
