A news bulletin aired by Australia's public broadcaster, SBS, on Saturday reveals that authorities have dispatched military to move hundreds of thousands of refugees to inland camps as the government's efforts to stop a further flow of boat arrivals are beginning to bear fruit. In the last week, authorities have intercepted seven vessels trying to carry refugees to Australia's northern coast. According to SBS, over 45,000 of the more than 150,000 refugees who have been evacuated from Indonesia are already encamped in the towns of Aratuk and Manjina. According to the government, the move is not a "precipitous" one but an "evacuation from Indonesia to Australian territory to be quarantined and investigated." It is the first time in 17 years that an Australian government has been compelled to evacuate its refugee population to a foreign country. Indonesian authorities say that the boat arrival points in Central and North Sulawesi—a hotspot for the boat people's route—are now controlled. The boats that come ashore are detained and the people on board are then taken to Australian-funded detention centers where they will undergo biometric checks and will be given a medical examination. The evacuations "have to be reported to the Australian government," SBS said. A senior official at the Australian immigration department said that the evacuations will be considered a success if the refugees can be "speedily repatriated" to Indonesia. "Sometimes the boats carrying the refugees are caught on land. There are actually some boats that are caught on land and they are later intercepted by the Australian navy," said the official. "After that, the refugees are moved to offshore camps or to settlements on Australian territory," he said. SBS reports that the boat people are being moved in order to "stop the flow of people from the Middle East, East Africa and South Asia" to Australia. The official said that the refugees are "very happy" with the plan and accepted it as a good one. According to the report, the refugees were given $2,000 "for voluntary transfers to Indonesia." SBS said that a boat carrying more than 1,000 refugees was recently stopped in the Makassar Strait, carrying people from Burma. According to the Pericardial effusion in acute promyelocytic leukemia: a rare complication. Acute promyelocytic leukemia (APL) is a well-defined clinical and pathologic entity in which the disease presents with a blastic transformation of the promyelocytes. The disease also presents with quite a spectrum of clinical findings in different patients. We report a case of an otherwise healthy 57-year-old man with APL with pleural and pericardial effusion.

There was no specific history of infection or trauma. The pericardial effusion rapidly improved on oral administration of aspirin alone. However, the pleural effusion did not resolve, and a pericardiocentesis was performed for the therapy of both pleural and pericardial effusions. Aspirin was reintroduced after the pericardiocentesis. It's not long before one of the best sights you can see with your own eyes. As some of the biggest eyes on planet Earth, the huge flaming jewels that create the Northern Lights let off pulses of brilliant red, green, blue and other colors in every direction. The Northern Lights, well just the lights, as the color doesn't display well in photos, are visible for thousands of miles around, but it's the position of the Northern Lights that makes it so rare and fascinating. They usually appear in the sky at the very top of the atmosphere, where it's extremely cold, but not freezing - on the North American continent, this happens between about November and April, but it can happen year round. The effect is just incredible, and something you shouldn't miss out on, even if you live quite far away from it. As you might expect, there are people who are happy if they get a glimpse of the Northern Lights, and they go out to see them. A few even stay for days if they can. Some of these people are pretty good at spotting them, even better than most of us here on Earth. In fact, they even get paid for spotting them. In the middle of the 1990's, Sweden decided to begin a program to track down people who could spot the Northern Lights. Participants could either work for themselves, or for the program. The reward for being the best of the best paid up to $60,000 for the potential of spotting the most Northern Lights. As it turns out, there were also quite a few people who were willing to pay to see the Northern Lights,
