A thriller about a man trying to rid himself of his demons, while running away from his past. STORYLINE The story begins with Frank, a 33 year old man who finally has everything he ever wanted. Over the last years he married the woman he loved, they became parents to the daughter he always wanted. And then one day everything changed. When the accidental death of their newborn daughter was ruled as an homicide Frank, once again, tried to put everything together. It didn't help that Frank's marriage was beginning to fall apart, his father was old and sick, his life was falling apart, when he heard a voice screaming from a crowd of people. “Don’t be mad about that devil, it’s nothing. It doesn’t really exist.” It was like a spell was cast on him, but what a spell it was. Never before had he had an encounter with the Grim Reaper, but that one night he was touched by what he had never experienced before. Death, in the form of a child. Now everything changed. He became obsessed with revenge. He began to see those people that were responsible for what happened as his enemies. He wanted to save those people from the evil. As Frank’s obsession grew, so did his rage. As his life turned into a living hell, he tried to save the ones he loved from the demons that haunt him. He killed the sick man that his father lived with, but it was in vain, the dying man managed to find a way to make everything come out his way, but still, when Frank learned of the grim truth he had to flee in a hurry. Frank changed his name and moved from place to place, to evade his former lover who knew of the connection between Frank and his daughter's death, yet she still wanted her money. Suffice to say that he was on the run for long enough, until finally, he managed to step back into familiar grounds. He had nowhere to go, he was stuck, he had to find a way out. But still, in his struggle to escape his past, he began to look for a way to save the ones he loved.

The modern age of the world is in trouble. The so-called zero state has led to one world where there are no differences in peoples or classes of people. We are now in the era of the bullet train, where people are separated by names, not colors, and joined together for one purpose alone: to wage war. Living in the lower half of a bullet train, a traveler makes a way out of the station and goes to the open sea. There, he gets on a giant whale called the Ghengis Whale. Together with passengers on the whale, he sails the world through his own war. With the strength of his people, he will win all the wars of the world! Loss of faith or respect for one's dreamshapes is considered a condition in which the dreamer has lost access to their astral senses, and can no longer access the abilities given to them by the dreamshape. L.S.D. affects nearly everyone at some point in their life. Some people can control L.S.D. quite easily, others feel its effects most strongly at certain times or places in their life. For some people, the effects of L.S.D. are minor and can be quickly dealt with. Others, however, may suffer from symptoms lasting for many years, and in severe cases, all their astral senses may fail permanently. In these cases, the dreamer is in desperate need of the advice offered by the Dreamshape Council and its inhabitants.

Dreamland is inhabited by Dreamshapes, including all manner of humanoids and an infinite number of fantastic creatures that live in this unique and fantastic world. Though Dreamland and its inhabitants have always been there, mankind has only been able to interact with them for the past three hundred years. Dreamland is a world of many stories, all of which are intertwined with each other. These stories, the Dreamshapes and the dreamers that inhabit them are constantly changing, expanding and interacting with each other. This infinite world is held together by a mighty Dreamshape called the Dreamer, who is also connected to all the inhabitants of Dreamland. His astral senses allow him to see his world, feel it and know its history and even tell it stories. The Dreamshapes' activities are constantly changing, and the peoples that live in Dreamland are just as diverse. Some are short-lived and transient, while others are permanent fixtures of the land. Some Dreamshapes prefer to live in their own places and others wander from one place to another in search of an exciting adventure. Some Dreamshapes live in harmony with their inhabitants, while others are just as likely to turn a new inhabitant of Dreamland into a zombie! In Dreamland, life is not always what it seems. There are all manner of fantastic creatures, including gods and dwarves, and even ghosts and witches. Each inhabitant of Dreamland has their own family, as well as their own history and memories. Dreamland is a land that has its own destiny and a certain path to follow, and it is the dreamer's job to learn more about it! As a powerful dreamshaper, you are charged with such a duty

Plankton #2014+10+100 where we witness the ongoing demise, the inexorable decline, of Homo sapiens, and the planet continues its mighty march towards its own certain demise. Lets join the party people! So last Friday, we had our last trip on the year long Plankton project with at one point 28 species counted between us, which was quite a party, but this time around, will not be that fun-filled like it has been before. Long story short: I had two more species, which were dead for a while now, while with my buddy "Joe" the concentration on plankton, in our hands, remained at a fraction than it was at the start of the event. Let's just travel into #10, which was the one with Rick passionate enough to go over the seashore, land for the western coast of Poland, to catch some plankton using a seine net. So along with myself, we followed the shore, to the next pool, we had planned. The few steps it took, were full of obstacles, but we were on track to relax a bit, so when a jellyfish appeared, we had - and it stuck with us, so we stopped, and investigated it a bit. It was a brown amoeba sized blob, which had tentacles, that fully covered the jellyfish, and we were unsure, if we should keep it. The jellyfish struggled, sort of like a little manta ray, but a little less powerful. After 10-15 minutes, when we were kind of sick of it, and we "wanted" some more plankton, we finished the jellyfish. The tentacles were soft, like leafs of a grass, and we couldn't detach them from the jellyfish, so we dunked the hard-to-digest blob in our sea for a little while. Then we picked it out, and then it started to dry. We were guessing, we had gotten a good field practice a bit beforehand. The main thing was that we had learnt how to handle uncomfortable creatures such as jellyfish. Having materialized on the sandy part on the shore, we were not only hand-in-hand with the jellyfish, but we got crazy about the stuff as well.

We never left out and had time to look at the plants, the small shrubs, the way the local winds blew, we tasted the water, we bit into
