Currently our team works on five different game projects, two of which are published under our own brand. Palenogames.com has won several awards for our games and products and was nominated for "Game of the Year" by PocketNow. The company was founded in 2014 by a group of developers who were frustrated with the lack of information about their country. Russia is regarded as one of the most innovative countries in the world and its richness lies in the variety of talents and innovation, but getting information about the state of the industry or about recent games is still a difficult task for non-Russian gamers. We are doing our part to change that, gathering information from different sources and promoting the games, services and products of Russian developers. Palenogames.com strives to make the Russian gaming experience visible and appreciated as part of the global gaming community. Starting a few weeks ago, the group of activists behind the movement led by Center for a Stateless Society – generally considered the most active and effective anarcho-capitalist activist group, in the US – decided to start a group in the UK. The spin-off is called Small Society. So far the project has been pretty quiet, though it will ramp up soon. Since the movement aims at creating a free-market anarchist society – characterized by real private property – it is of special importance, for the supporters, to resist common criticisms against anarchism. The most common argument against anarchism is that it is only suitable for the bottom-dwellers, homeless people, squatters, drop-outs, etc. This is a classical application of the neoliberal myth of the “rational consumer”: you get the best results from a system, when you aim at optimizing the “criteria” [1] of that system. In the case of anarchism, that means that the basic rule of private property is mostly ignored. The theory by Noam Chomsky and Edward Hermann gives a description of how this concept is popularized to the general public, mostly via the media. The rights of the men to dominate the resources of nature, to dominate the people, to accumulate vast fortunes, are recognized as fundamental rights. (...) The corporation is granted rights to own
