In Elasticsearch, is it possible to change the version of a file (not revision) without having to commit (push) the changes? I can commit changes (with a commit range), but not changes from a specific version. A: What you mean to do is "checkin" the file. The way in which you would do this is by specifying the path and the version in the commit message. While it is not directly possible to re-version files in an index, you can control the ordering of the version (sort) of documents. This allows to an extent to be able to re-version files but you will be using a lot of storage (at least for old versions).
