Hi everyone, ive been trying to get my head around the scrum methodology and ive had a chat to a very good scrum practitioner from uber he said that you should be the most hands on the project to get the best out of it. My question is should the software developer be at every scrum meeting or should it be the scrum master or Product owner only? or does the scrum master report back to the developers at scrum meetings? Thank you for any replies. Scrum is an agile software development framework widely used for the development of IT projects. It was developed by Ken Schwaber and Jeff Sutherland, and since 2006 has been an official trademark of Scrum, Inc. Scrum is based on the principles of agile software development and lean. But a major feature of scrum, unlike some other methodologies, is that it is not prescriptive, permitting a creative and flexible approach to managing software development. Scrum embodies agile and lean software development practices, which when practiced well, can lead to high quality software and a high level of organizational excellence. Scrum is used primarily by agile teams, which are self-organizing. This approach to developing software fits well within the IT development context and is used in the construction and operation of many IT projects. It is widely used by many software development teams globally. Scrum is characterized by daily builds, short iterations, and customer collaboration. Daily builds (or sprint reviews) are a transparent process that occurs daily and allows the team to adapt its work to immediate needs, respond to change, and collaborate with the product owner, sponsors, and other stakeholders. Daily builds are the primary means by which the team communicates and collaborates with stakeholders. Short iterations, which take 5-8 weeks, are more frequent than many agile methodologies, and allow for a higher degree of innovation than traditional project and program development cycles. This greater degree of flexibility is necessary when working with short-lived projects and uncertain requirements. Team members are equally responsible for the technical excellence of their work. The scrum methodology is based on the ten principles of the Agile Manifesto and others. The scrum framework is useful for many projects, but not all projects are suitable for or can be properly organized within the framework. Scrum is also characterized by the scrum master's focus on coaching rather than planning. The scrum master is primarily concerned with leading, facilitating, aligning, and recognizing the team's progress. The 6d1f23a050
