While watching the skies swirl above her home this week, a friend of mine found herself amused by the number of birds and other animals that decided to make the same flight from south to north and land at her doorstep. It turned out to be her lifetime's worth of surrealistc nature photography. "This was by far my most surreal of nature photos," she told me. "My daughter and I were in Vancouver watching the street traffic lights change from yellow to red. I was amazed at how many green cars turned yellow and then red. I asked my daughter if she was not surprised. She answered, "Well, maybe there is a larger purpose to this?" On our way home we passed this bird perched in a big tree. We stopped to watch him flop down and then he began to strut around the corner. We then saw a flock of birds flying in the breeze and landed in this tree. We got out our camera and had some fun. Funny how our first instinct was to photograph the spirit of the moment." The animals then began to come to her home in her quieter neighborhood.
