I told Wexler, 'If he comes to your studio in my name, I'm gonna kill him! I'm not gonna keep him. You can't keep a talent like that!' He said, 'He'll come in your name if you'll get him.' He was telling me that they were cutting the session, and in the meantime I'd get a call and Jerry Lee would say, 'Send me the records I've done!' And Wexler was telling him they'd put them in the vault and he'd be flying out to come to my studio in my name. He got to the studio and I said, 'What you here for Jerry Lee?' And he said, 'Oh, I'm your new singer!' I said, 'Jerry Lee, you want a fucking piano? I'll get you a fucking piano! I'll get you a fucking upright! I'll get you anything!' Quite a contrast, he later observed, to earlier days when musicians like Richard "Groove" Holmes, Muddy Waters and Howlin' Wolf recorded at a modest lab in Alabam's Panola Mountain region. He also contrasted those earlier sessions with the attention to detail, desire to record and produce records for all musicians, and artistic integrity exhibited by Chess executives. Though Phillips never worked a day in his life on his own label, his dream was a big business so that record labels would be as widespread as book publishing was in those days. Regina Bell, whom he met when he recorded Howlin's 'Keeper of the Fire' on Chess's two-record Nostalgia set, recalls him saying that he would handle record business so that record labels would be like the New York Times. A few years later, in 1952, the main office of Phillips's RCA label was opened in a loft on Union Avenue, and in 1967, a new main office was established in the Union Avenue loft building that once housed the Memphis Recording Service, now the home of the Sun Records Archive and Museum. Shortly thereafter, the main office was moved to an adjacent building and the recording studio was moved to the former home of the Memphis Recording Service.

Daem Chess Studio Full 76

Anybody who was trying to study acting when that period came around, had to go to N.Y. or Chicago or L.A., and Sam Phillips was sure-footed in his approach, his way of training was so practical and easy to understand. He was just so, well, Sam. No egos, no bullshit. In the studio, he was the most natural and most down-to-earth, up front person I met. In class, it was the same, in the restaurants of

Memphis he was totally at ease, at ease with whatever or who ever he was around at any given time. He had that innocence - it wasn't about trying to make something happen, it was about simply sharing what was in your heart. To our way of thinking, people like Elvis, Carl Perkins and Jerry Lee Lewis didn't stumble into the world of music or the recording studio - they were born in it. And Sam Phillips deserves huge credit for creating a factory that produced these musical geniuses.

That was a genius idea and it's my hope that young actors who want to try their hand at music will follow in Sam Phillips' footsteps and that this book and website may inspire or at least inform them that doing what they love is more than just an ideal, it's actually achievable. So now, if you want to take it to the next level, and our door is always open, we have some good news for you.

You can come to The Acting Studio and get the kind of training and nurturing and support you'd expect of an acting school, but in an atmosphere where the joy of discovery is taken to a new level by the value system instilled by the legendary Sam Phillips.

There are not many places, if there are any, where you can find such a holistic approach to acting on a consistent basis. Our ethos is one of dedication and love of the craft. It is almost sacrosanct - even teachers can only learn so much. That's because there is always that next step, that next level.

'Secret to the method' only works because the teacher is committed to making it available to others. What we do is not a method, because there is no method in acting. But there are countless ways to manifest the same ideas and that's what makes it fun and exciting. Students can always come and ask for clarification.

We give them a forum for their questions, we talk about our feelings, and that's what we're here for,
to share our feelings.
