FairUse Wizard 3D R2 Full 16

In a beautifully made black and white film, the hero of Jeanne Dielman, 23 Quai du Commerce, 1080 Bruxelles (Jeanne Dielman, 23 quai du commerce, 1080 Bruxelles) is introduced as a young woman just off the train in Brussels, in thick mist, carrying a suitcase and wearing a hat. The camera lingers on her, waiting to see what she will do next. It is a safe, quiet scene of suspense, heightened by Mieszko Klein's tender, just-completed symphony score. Then the camera careens down the steps of the train with her, into the station, and we follow her right into the thick of the cross-town hustle and bustle of central Brussels, in daily life. She strolls with purpose, direct and unencumbered, and we get a feel for this inner balance through a series of immaculate, miniature, psychological scenes that range from day and nighttime in the streets of Brussels to scenes inside a new building under construction. The first-time director Christian Carion keeps the camera in tight focus, with its lens never stray too far from Jeanne's face. Each scene is molded onto Jeanne's thin form, and the dramatic moments fall perfectly into place. Expanded essay by Chris Manning (PDF, 456KB)

Movie Still of Jeanne Dielman, 23 Quai du Commerce, 1080 Bruxelles Killing Them Softly is a violent, bloody crime drama with a whole lot of people getting murdered. It deals with all aspects of a life of a low-level criminal who gets caught up with a drug lord in Boston. Director Andrew Dominik and writer Eric Kripke have created a film that rips the stoic heart out of the conventional crime film. They have perfected the art of understatement; their actors gain substance because the dialogue is reduced to a minimalist minimum. The result is an intelligent, beautifully shot and acted action film that somehow manages to avoid being preachy. 5ec8ef588b
