Monetization can be a great way for ministry leaders to think about and provide for the church, but it should be done purposefully and with great intention. Although I appreciate the goal of monetization, I think that ministries should be designed to challenge their leaders, equip their leaders, and communicate the gospel. Most of the talk around monetization looks too much like it is simply about "how can we turn more money into dollars" rather than how can we be more clear in what it means to serve God with our lives. A mistake I see too often is that pastors with good intentions and strong desires to be a blessing to God have chosen to use their precious time to fundraise. The problem with that is that every day of that work takes away from the time they can spend on the ministry God is calling them to do. Honestly, I cannot remember a single sermon God has called me to preach that I didnt have to fundraise the money for. Omnigraffle was a drawing and diagramming tool that ran on Windows, macOS and iOS. It could handle large projects with lots of different kinds of content: diagrams, lists, flow charts, timelines. It had a presentation layer that included publishable PDF files. You could export lists and charts in PDF, SVG and XAML formats for use in Microsoft Powerpoint and PowerPoint. You could also create entirely new documents with sets of predefined layouts. The tool could automatically generate diagrams and layouts for chart of accounts, business accounting and ERP applications. Finally, Omnigraffle had many shapes and objects for use with vector graphics. What struck me when I saw this on iTunes is that, here on Apple TV, it is officially a Mac desktop app. You can sign up for an account and download the Omnigraffle app for iPad and iPhone for free. On the iMac you can buy it for $80. However, to get a better UI on the Apple TV, iWorks has come out with a ton of redesigns for common iWork applications like Pages and Numbers. Why would you buy the Mac version when you can get the complete family pack for only $20, the same as buying new Apple TV or Apple Music on their own? Plus you can download upgrades for free.

Miracle 2.82 Software With Loader is a comprehensive application which allows Android developers to solve issues with their devices and get it resolved quickly. Users dont require any additional application or library to process with the application, it has a simple and easy setup with a wide range of Android device support such as ZTE, Coolpad, Oppo, Xiaomi, and many other manufacturer brands. You can also download MR.Gestures for Xamarin. The potential is obviously huge. My pessimism is that based on the state of software todaywhat most people use on their phones and tablets, desktops, and the webthere is arguably only one company with the technical and financial resources to make this possible that might be interested in doing it in a way that isnt based on selling you shit through in-view advertising (as well as using what you see and hear through AR to profile you).
