

If you dont want to install, you can also find the latest version by going to File Explorer -> Settings -> System and Notifications -> Windows Update > Options. From there, you can click the “Check for updates” button. If there are any updates, a notification will appear in the lower right-hand corner of File Explorer, and clicking “Check” will let you download and install the updates. You can also right-click a local or network drive and choose Properties -> General -> Update now. File Explorer lets you open File Explorer apps from the Recents view. Users can also drag files from the File Explorer preview pane into other apps. You can open other app windows from one of the File Explorer apps in your Recents view. And you can close other app windows from the same app in your Recents view by clicking the X button. If you see a balloon that says “open with” right-click a file to change the default app for that file. When you change your default apps, File Explorer will be in default mode until you open the app again. Changes you make using the new mode will not take effect until you change the default app. For example, if you change File Explorer to view List view, and then view items in Details view, the changes will only take effect when you open a file in File Explorer again. This build has a new feature called suggested actions. With it, when you copy a date, time, or phone number, Windows will suggest related actions such as creating a calendar event or making a phone call with an app. The build also fixes a variety of bugs, including one in File Explorer that displayed the error 0x800703E6 when copying files from Google Drive, and another that caused the Task Manager to become unreadable in dark mode when the CPU reached 100%.
