S.Ct. 633, 32 L.Ed.2d 701 (1972), the Supreme Court held that the statute of limitations for a federal civil rights action "begins to run when the plaintiff knows or has reason to know of the existence and cause of the injury which is the basis of his action." 590 F.2d at 738. The Sixth Circuit rejected the applicability of the continuing violation theory to the case before it, on the ground that the defendant's "conduct was of a sufficiently permanent nature so that the victim could accurately assess the amount of his or her damages at the time of the alleged discriminatory acts." Id. at 741. The court therefore ruled that the plaintiff's claim under Title VII was time-barred. Id. Defendant has not attempted to distinguish the facts of the case before this court from those in Williams. In his complaint, plaintiff has alleged that defendant made a number of fraudulent misrepresentations over a three-year period. Thus, if plaintiff knew of the fraudulent acts at the time they occurred, the statute of limitations would begin to run as of the date they occurred. Plaintiff's deposition testimony indicates that he learned of defendant's fraudulent misrepresentations in December 1989, when defendant was negotiating with the IRS for a loan extension. Plaintiff did not bring suit until August 1991, more than three years later. Defendant argues that plaintiff had no reason to suspect defendant's fraudulent conduct until December 1989. Plaintiff was the sole owner of both the Restaurant and the Waterfowl Club. He admittedly knew of the bad financial condition of both businesses. It is not apparent why plaintiff did not investigate defendant's alleged misrepresentations to the IRS earlier. More importantly, plaintiff should have known that defendant had misrepresented the financial condition of the businesses. Defendant mailed out an eight-page "Restaurant Profit and Loss Statement" and a "Waterfowl Club Income and Loss Statement" to plaintiff. The statements show that defendant's costs exceeded the revenues by almost $100,000 from the third quarter of 1984 through the first quarter of 1986. Although these misrepresentations were not identical, they
